ar. Like Hasib, his death was seen as a setback, but not a mortal blow to the group.

NATO spokesman Captain Bill Duvivier later elaborated on the raid, telling AFP: "There were women and children in the compound" where Hasib was killed.

"The assault force was able to safely separate the women and children from the combatants and there were no civilian casualties," he said.

Salvin added that "more than 10" IS fighters have been killed since an offensive began against them in March, though he could not immediately provide an estimate on how many remain.

Kabul-based analyst Ahmad Eedi said the killing was unlikely to affect the group in a dramatic way because he would be quickly the local IS presence from a peak of as many as 3,000 fighters to a maximum of 800.

There has still been no official word from NATO forces on the toll from the GBU-43/B Massive Ordnance Air Blast, dubbed the "Mother of All Bombs," dropped in Nangarhar last month.

The blast killed at least 95 jihadists, according to the Afghan defense ministry, but NATO officials have said they are still assessing the damage. Journalists have been prevented from reaching the blast site, but Salvin said fighting was still ongoing in the area.

The attack triggered global shockwaves, as observers questioned the bomb's use against a militant group that is not considered as big a threat to Afghanistan as the Taliban.

Climate talks open in Bonn

GERMANY: Uncertainty over the United States' future in the climate-rescue Paris Agreement loomed large over United Nations talks that opened in Bonn Monday to work out the nuts and bolts of implementing the hard-fought international deal.

US President Donald Trump has yet to announce whether he intends keeping a campaign promise to withdraw Washington from the pact in whose birth his predecessor, Barack Obama, was instrumental.

"There's no question that if the US withdraws it is going to create difficulties [...] in the negotiations," Paula Caballero of the World Resources Institute think-tank said as climate envoys met for their first session since Trump's arrival in the White House.

She was confident, though, that these challenges would not be "unsurmountable," noting that businesses, cities and individual US states were firmly on track to a green energy future.

A total of 196 countries — all except Nicaragua and Syria — are parties to the 2015 deal which Trump threatened to "cancel."

The 11-day Bonn haggle is meant to start drafting a "rulebook" to guide member countries in the practical execution of the pact, which seeks to brake global warming by curbing fossil fuel emissions. — AFP

sanctions loom, more local goods in stores of the national airline, and the Naegohyang conglomerate have diversified into manufacturing consumer goods including cigarettes and sports clothing.

North Korea is one of the most closed countries in the world and visits by foreigners are highly regulated.

A Reuters team that was in the capital Pyongyang last month was allowed to go to a grocery store, accompanied by government minders, where shelves were filled with locally made drinks, biscuits and other basic food items. Other visitors have seen locally made canned foods, coffee, liquor, toothpaste, cosmetics, soap, bicycles and other odds on sale in the city.

"As new factories open, the branding, packaging and ingredients of our food products have improved," said shop assistant Rhee Kyong-sook, 33.

Kim Chul-ung, a 39-year-old physical education teacher visiting the store, said: "I can taste real fruit in the drinks that are made in North Korea, compared to drinks from other countries."

Visitors say locally made consumer goods are becoming increasingly sophisticated and QR or matrix barcodes can be found on a wide range of products from makeup to soft drinks. Market vendors are also becoming more competitive, offering samples of their food to shoppers, something they did not do five years ago.

"Around 2013, Kim Jong-un started talking about the need for import substitution," said Andrew Abrahamian of Choson Exchange, a Singapore-based group that trains North Koreans in business skills.

"There was clearly recognition that too many products were being imported from China, not just high-end consumer goods but also lower-end ones like food."

Air Koryo's range of products now includes cigarettes, fizzy drinks, taxis and petrol stations.

"Naegohyang" or "My Homeland," began as a Pyongyang-based tobacco factory, but has expanded in recent years to produce playing cards, electronic goods and sports clothing. The company even sponsors a women's football team of the same name.

The North Korean companies were not available for comment and do not publish revenue or profit statements. It was not possible to identify any joint venture partners.
